

FISHING

For those who are unaware, the fishing in and around the Central Pacific Coast of Costa Rica is some of the best in the world. In fact, Quepos is often called the “the billfish capital of the world.” The water up and down the south and south central coastline is teeming with a wide variety of the finest game fish (and table-fare) in the world. These waters are called home by sailfish, marlin, swordfish, wahoo, dolphin (mahi/dorado), and tuna (blackfin and yellowfin). Inshore one can find grouper, many species of snapper, roosterfish, and even tarpon and snook. There is fishing for any type of fisherman. In addition, there is an enormous number of professional charters located throughout the area that offer a wide range of services for both the experienced and novice. The vast majority of these charters are English speaking, with full day or half day options. Without a doubt, one can expect the highest quality of fishing and chartering crews in Costa Rica.
